Help to halt 'Home Alone' worries

Young drivers left home alone and thinking of sneaking a run out in the family motor while their parents are away on holiday should be wondering who's watching them.

Pay-as-you-drive insurer Coverbox is effectively providing car-sitting for parents who take a holiday but leave their grown-up kids in charge of the family home.

Mum and dad can monitor the movement of their cars from any internet access point in the world, including mobile phones.

"Every parent knows the feeling- what damage and mayhem will they come back to at home when they leave their teen or early 20s offspring with the house keys?" said Sandy Dunn of Coverbox.

"We can't stop the parties, the drinks cabinet raids but we can certainly help when it comes to keeping an eye on parents' cars while they're away.

"Coverbox monitors the movements of cars - we know when a car is moved, and where it travels, so when parents go on holiday we can help them ensure their cars stay in the garage or drive.

"Every Coverbox policyholder can monitor their car's movements from anywhere in the world anyway - and parents can log on to the Coverbox site from mobiles or PDAs and see whether it has been driven, when it was driven, and how far.

"This information relates to fractions of a mile, and times down to the second."
